1 Assignment 6: Sentimental Analysis

1.1 Research Question

Are AFINN scores for words predictive enough for whether a text is labeled positive or negative for Coronavirus tweets?

1.1.1 Hypothesis

I hypothesize that the training model would express around 0.7 accuracy.

1.1.2 Road Map for SA

1. Wrangle Data
2. Count by text for sentiment - I used AFINN, and decide the outcome variable
3. Visualize the predictors by the outcome variable through bar charts
4. Model the data by conducting logistic regression
5. Discussion

1.2 Data

The data used in this assignment was collected by Aman Miglani, ANkit Gupta, and Raenish David. The tweets all have been pulled from Twitter and manual tagging has been done by the authors. The dataset containing columns labeled as location, tweet at, original tweet, and label.

1.2.1 Variables

Outcome Variable: Sentiment is the binary outcome variable, which is the review type divided into positive and negative. Predictor: mean sentiment score generated by AFINN

1.2.2 Data Wrangling

#In order to organize the data successfully the following steps were completed. 1. Called in dataframes as tibble
2. Filtered dataframes to narrow scope to answer research question 3. clean the data

rm(list=ls(all=TRUE))

corona <- corona %>%
  na.omit()

Let's filter the data and only keep the variables we want to focus.

corona_sa <- corona %>%
  select("UserName", "OriginalTweet", "Sentiment") %>% filter(Sentiment %in% c("Extremely Negative", "Extremely Positive", "Negative", "Positive")) %>% mutate(
    Sentiment = ifelse(Sentiment == "Extremely Positive", "Positive", Sentiment), #attribute extremely positive and negative to positive and negative Sentiment = ifelse(Sentiment == "Extremely Negative", "Negative", Sentiment)
```

corona_sa <- corona_sa %>%
  filter(Sentiment != "Neutral") #filter the neutral
```

unnest_corona <- corona_sa %>% #unnest the tweets for preparing conducting afinn unnest_tokens(word, OriginalTweet)

I used AFINN to count by text for sentiment

afinn <- get_sentiments("afinn")

afinn
```

#create an average sentiment score by text

mean_data_afinn <- afinn_words %>% group_by(UserName) %>%
  dplyr::summarize(mean_sent = mean(value))

str(mean_data_afinn)

tibble [31,053 × 2] (S3: tbl_df/tbl/data.frame)
$ UserName : int [1:31053] 3800 3801 3802 3803 3807 3808 3810 3811 3813 3814 ...
$ mean_sent: num [1:31053] 1 2 0 -1.25 2 -1 0.75 1 2 1 ...

considering I have categorized the data in advance, I directly add the mean to the original dataset based on User name

total_corona_sa <- corona_sa%>% right_join(mean_data_afinn, by="UserName") %>% mutate(Sentiment = as.factor(Sentiment))%>% #factorize the sentiment
  na.omit() #get ird of na

1.2.3 Visualize the predictors by the outcome variable

Let's graph out some differences

bar_plot_afinn <- total_corona_sa%>% ggplot(aes(x = Sentiment, y = mean_sent)) +
  geom_bar(stat = "summary") + #you provide the mean scores.
  coord_flip() + #flip it around so it is easier to read xlab("Review Type") + #label x axes
  ylab("Mean sentiment") + #label y axes
  ggtitle("Mean sentiment for review types")

bar_plot_afinn

1.2.4 Model the data

set.seed(1234) #initialize a pseudorandom number generator so that train and test set will be the same each time you call functions

#create new variable in tibble for division into training and test sets
final_tib <- total_corona_sa%>% mutate(id = row_number())

#70% of data as training set
train_set <- final_tib %>%
  sample_frac(0.70) #which to select (the 70%)

#30% of data test set
test_set <- anti_join(final_tib, train_set, by = 'UserName')
#anti_join, basically says grab what is in final_tib that is not in train_set

Let's test if the sample sizes across both groups are equal. It looks like they are pretty equal!)

total_corona_sa%>%
  group_by(Sentiment)%>%
  count
```

# A tibble: 2 × 2

1.2.9 Discussion

According to the mean sentiment bar chart, we can see that the labeled negative reports are comparatively greater than positive reports. Meanwhile, because we exclude the neutral labeled reports, we loss some objects.

The Logistic regression model of the training data showed that the R square is 15382.63, C score is 0.93, and the p-value of mean_sent is smaller than 0.0001, which is strongly significant.

Based on the results from the final test, we can see that the trained model performs pretty well on predicting test set, which had an accuracy score 0.8776. The Kappa value is 0.7546. The recall value is 0.8912, the precision value is 0.8751, and F1 value is 0.8831.

The accuracy seems not bad, based on the mosaic plot, we can see strikingly larger upper left part and bottom right corner, which are considered as the right prediction. Based on the confusion matrix for final logistic regression, we can numerically see that there are 9025 objects correctly predicted as positive and 10051 correctly predicted as negative.

The current model I built supported my hypothesized accuracy.

Due to the limitation of Sentimental Analysis, we cannot classify the tweets into more detailed positive/negative classification.
